Grandma Essie

Following her 90th birthday, Essie was under pressure from family members to relocate to an assisted living center. Essie's granddaughter, Jan Miller, wanted to help Essie live out her years in her own home. Although an elementary school teacher by trade, Jan saw an enormous need for affordable assistive devices that could help the elderly and disabled maintain their independence and freedom.

"Grandma had difficulty performing simple daily tasks like getting in and out of bed or standing from a couch or car and we could not find any products that would make those tasks easier" said Jan, "but she also didn't want a 'cage' (her words), around her bed."

JAN MILLER | Chief Executive Officer

Motivated to solve Essie's greatest mobility challenges, without intruding on her home comforts, Jan created a few "furniture-like" devices to assist her grandmother. These inventions enabled Essie to live in the red brick home—the home where her children were raised—for seven years longer than anyone (including her family) thought possible. This victory, combined with Jan's commitment to better society, inspired her to create Stander, Inc., inventor and manufacturer of affordable mobility devices for the elderly and disabled.

So Easy Even a Rocket Scientist Could Do It

Stander was attempting to accomplish what no company before them could: provide high-quality, affordable assistive devices that would help people get in and out of a couch, bed, or automobile. Jan knew that the secret to success was in the product design and that accomplishing this task was first dependent upon finding the right inventor / engineer. Fortunately for Stander, Jan was married to Troy Miller, a real, live, rocket scientist. Troy applied for the position, and after a grueling interview process he got the job.

HOW IT WORKS

When a person stands from the typical recliner, it tilts forward, dropping the arms and seat of an already low chair by 3-4 inches. Simply raising the chair by 5 or 6 inches, necessary for independent standing, makes it dangerously unstable. Stander has developed a safe and easy solution! When Recliner Risers are installed, they raise a chair 1 3/4 inches and limit the forward tilt allowing an additional 3-4 inches of lift. The 4-6 total inches of extra support gives a weakened person a biomechanical advantage and enables them to stand on their own. Recliner Risers attach quickly and easily to the wooden base of your favorite recliner. Our patented design raises your effective seat height 4-6 inches while only raising your chair 1 3/4 inches. Each box contains four Recliner Risers, two Rocker Limiters, 16 screws, Velcro®, and instruction manual.

RAISE YOUR RECLINER UP TO 6 INCHES!
